History of Vernon, Arizona.....

In August 1875, the first settlers, Don Casimiro Padilla and his family settled in the Mineral Canyon. Their group consisted of about 25 people. Around the turn of the century the Wilhelm brothers, Haight, George, and John settled in the Vernon Valley, as well as Cap Naegle and Dick Gibbons. By 1910 there were about 15 families in the area. A post office was established and it was decided to come up with a name. Some wanted to adopt the Mexican name for the area, "Mineral", but "Vernon" was the final decision. Most of these people made their living by sheep and cattle ranching.

At first school was held in people's homes. In 1917 George Wilhelm donated land for a schoolhouse. With donated labor and materials a one-room schoolhouse was soon built which served not only as a school but as a place for church functions, dances, plays, and community meetings. Later on as the population grew, another room was added. At one point the schoolhouse was the only building in the Vernon Valley. Everyone lived on ranches scattered far and wide over the surrounding country.

George and Haight Wilhelm who owned what is now Vernon townsite decided to divide the land into town blocks so that people might buy it for homes. George owned the land on the east side of the street and Haight owned the land on the west side. Haight donated land to build a church. Lee and Effie Wilhelm, Haight's son and his wife donated land for a community park. The rest of the land was sold to individuals for home sites.

Peaking in the 1920's, the Homestead Rush brought an increase of settlers to Vernon including those displaced by the Mexican Revolution.

At the time, the communities near to Vernon were Bannon, Pinon, Concho, Floy and Hunt. There were 6 post offices and 6 voting precincts in the area. Vernon and Concho are the only 2 towns still in existence.

Starting in the mid 20's through the 30's and for eighteen more years the lumber industry brought great economic prosperity to the Vernon area. The Goodman and Webb sawmills brought many people to the area and employed many locals as well. There were about 5 logging camps in the area at one time. Most of the money was made in logging and ranching, but some tried “dry land” farming as well – the Padilla family grew vegetables here and sold them in Concho.

Nancy Riggs was a midwife in Vernon in the 20’s and was the closest thing to a doctor that the area had. Besides that, if anyone needed medical attention they went to McNary.

By the 1960’s and 1970’s the sawmills were gone and many residents moved on to other areas.

Starting in the 80’s and continuing through the 90’s outlying neighborhood developments were established and the Vernon area has continued to grow and develop and now includes neighborhoods such as Timber Knoll, Winchester Trails, The Wilderness, Ojo Bonito, Apache Trails, Eagle Ridge, the Cross Roads, the “Y”, etc.

Vernon remains an unincorporated community with its main governance being from Apache County.

There are many ways to be involved in the community (see Local Organizations). Volunteers maintain and run the local park, food bank, and fire auxiliary. Many agree that Vernon is a great place to live.
